Colonial styles and options

In the United States, Colonial usually refers to American Colonial Revival architecture, which is based on the Georgian and Federal styles. These styles generally have a symmetrical facade, a projecting central pavilion or a portico with columns, and an elaborate front entrance with a pediment or hood over the door.

Double-hung wood and clad-wood windows

No other window represents Colonial design like a double-hung window. These windows have upper and lower sash that slide vertically past each other in a single frame. For enhanced visual appeal, select either six-, nine- or twelve-lite patterns for both the top and bottom sash, or the top sash alone. A complete range of options is shown on pages 28-29.

Recommended interior wood species

For visual consistency in your Colonial home, select interior wood species to coordinate with your cabinetry or furnishings. We offer three optional wood species, as well as standard solid pine AuraLast® wood.
